- Each researcher is guided by their own approach to the research itself.
- Which implies a worldview which provides the researcher with philosophical, theoretical, instrumental, and methodological foundations.
- This includes perception, beliefs, and awareness of different theories and practices used to carry out scientific research.
- It is the approach or thinking about the research, the accomplishing process, and the method of implementation. It is not a methodology, but rather a philosophy which provides the process of carrying out research, i.e., directs the process of carrying out research in a particular direction.

At the bottom of the slide, there is a Zoom control bar with buttons for Unmute, Start Video, Security, Participants (205), Chat, Share Screen, Pause/Stop Recording, Reactions, and More. - It means different things to different people
- The difference between its ideology and practice creates multiple interpretations and definitions.
- “What constitutes inclusive practice?” since the desirable (the ideological) may be different from the achievable (practice).
- What are the desirable, measurable outcomes of inclusion?
- Epistemological issues- what are the sources of knowledge in IE?
- Who should contribute to building this understanding?
- Role of policy?
