Incubation Program
Anupam Haat under Samvaad

Name of the event:	Anupam Haat under Samvaad
Name of the Organizer:	Incubation Program
Type of event:	Intra college
Objective:	The main objective of “ANUPAM HAAT” was to create a platform for student creators to showcase their creativity, skills and products. The initiative acted as a way to promote the unique and local talent as well as to create awareness about self reliance and entrepreneurship. Anupam haat was organised under “Samvaad” which served as an interactive space for meaningful conversations among students studying Hindi in Britain and Indian educators . The event aimed at creating opportunities for interaction between student entrepreneurs and community.

Brief Report

Anupam Haat under Incubation program in Janki Devi Memorial College had put a stall on 24th August 2026, starting at around 9 in the morning and was set up near JDVC, as a part of Samvaad, it was also organized for the British delegates visiting under the program.

The main highlight was Project Anupam and Anupam Haat, which was part of the incubation program which showcased the creativity and talent of young student creators and entrepreneurs. A stall was set up which had everything, crochet, paintings, artwork, keychains done up with rhinestones, jewellery, flower bouquets, and a handful of other things students had made themselves. Walking past, you could tell people had actually put time into this stuff.

The stalls also gave students a chance to see how their products would sell and how people responded to them. The crowd and teachers, all visited the stall as well, it created a platform for meaningful conversations between young entrepreneurs and community. Though the stall was setup for British delegates as well, they could not visit the stall. Plenty of people bought things too and the real conversations happening at the stalls made it lively and engaging.

By the end of it, Anupam Haat counted as a huge win. Good turnout, well-organised, and at the core, it was all about creativity, entrepreneurship, and student-led work.

Feedback

Response was mostly positive, with a lively crowd turning up throughout the day and keeping the venue busy. People really liked the quality of the handmade stuff, saying it felt genuinely unique and original compared to usual market items. A few students, new ones mostly, mentioned they enjoyed just wandering through the bustling stalls and taking in the atmosphere. Useful feedback on the products and their presentation was noted across the board, though unfortunately, visiting delegates were unable to visit the stalls.

Both faculty and students seemed to love it as a concept a smart, hands-on way to get people thinking about entrepreneurship, practical design, and creative problem-solving. Overall it went over really well, fitting right in with what Project Anupam's been building toward.

Incubation Program
Orientation Session

Name of the event:	Orientation Session
Name of the organizer:	Incubation Program
Type of event:	Intra College
Objectives of the event:	The main aim of the Orientation Session was to get students familiar with the Incubation Program, what it does, what it offers, and how they can be part of it, especially since a lot of newcomers weren't too sure about what the program actually involves. It also aimed to walk them through the different opportunities available, things like mentorship, skill development sessions, and platforms such as Anupam Haat, while giving them a chance to interact directly with the faculty, ask questions, and get comfortable enough to actually reach out or apply once they knew more about how things work.

Brief Report

The Incubation Program at Janki Devi Memorial College held its Orientation Session on 12th August 2026 in Room No. 13, from 12:00 p.m. to 1:00 p.m.

The session began with a screening of The Devil Wears Prada. While it wasn't part of the formal agenda, it gave everyone some time to settle in and feel comfortable before the orientation began. By the time the session officially started, the room already felt much more relaxed and welcoming.

The President then welcomed everyone and introduced the Incubation Program, followed by the Project Head, who spoke about what students could look forward to throughout the year. The conveners also shared insights into the program and its various initiatives, including Anupam Haat, Skill Enhancement Trainings, workshops, mentorship opportunities, networking, and support for students working on their own ideas.

The orientation then opened up for questions from the students. They asked about the application process, entrepreneurial opportunities, and the program's previous initiatives. The teachers addressed their questions by sharing their experiences and encouraged everyone to actively participate, explore new opportunities, and make the most of everything the Incubation Program has to offer.

Feedback

Students seemed genuinely curious throughout the session and liked what the society stood for and what it was trying to achieve. A lot of them were pretty impressed by Anupam Haat especially, and quite a few said they wanted to join, not just as regular students but also as creators putting their own work out there. Overall the response was warm, people left with a clearer idea of the program and seemed keen to actually get involved rather than just show up and leave

Incubation Program
Anupam Haat Orientation

Name of the event:	Anupam Haat
Name of the organizer:	Incubation Program
Type of event:	Intra College
Objectives of the event:	The objective of Anupam Haat was to provide student entrepreneurs and creators with a platform to showcase and sell their products within the college. The event aimed to encourage creativity, help students gain confidence in presenting their work, and give them practical exposure to marketing, customer interaction, and basic business management.

Brief Report

Janki Devi Memorial College's Incubation Program ran Anupam Haat on 5th August 2026, just outside the college auditorium. It started around 9 in the morning.

The whole point was to let student creators show off what they'd been working on. Stalls had everything, crochet, paintings, artwork, keychains done up with rhinestones, jewellery, flower bouquets, and a handful of other things students had made themselves. Walking past, you could tell people had actually put time into this stuff.

People showed up all day. Students, teachers, staff, they all came through, looked around, talked to whoever was running the stall. New students especially seemed into it, spending a good chunk of time just browsing. Plenty of people bought things too. Interaction wasn't huge though, mostly people looked, maybe grabbed something, and kept moving. Not a lot of real conversation happening at most stalls.

It wasn't only about putting talent on display. The stalls also gave students a chance to see how their products would sell and how people responded to them, even without the creators there in person to see it firsthand. The whole thing felt welcoming, and it probably encouraged a few students to keep going with whatever they're into.

By the end of it, Anupam Haat counted as a win. Good turnout, well organised by the Incubation Program. At the core it was about creativity, entrepreneurship, student-led work, though there's room next time to get creators and visitors actually talking to each other more.

Response was mostly positive. People liked the quality of the handmade stuff, said it felt original. A few students, new ones mostly, mentioned they enjoyed just wandering the stalls. Feedback on the products and how they were presented was noted, though the creators themselves weren't around at the stalls to hear it directly.

Teachers seemed to like it as a concept. Good way to get students thinking about entrepreneurship, creativity, that sort of thing. Overall it went over well, and it fits in with what the Incubation Program's been doing.
