PRATISHTHA MONGA
ON

RATATOUILLE

"...The association of fine dining with elevated class (a representation of society's need for hierarchy) can be justified to some extent, considering that it is the method that one employs with simple ingredients that turn it into edible heaven. This labour is not only limited to the person cooking, but also to the person eating. A deep knowledge of etiquette, the correct dessert spoon to use and a collected demeanour are prerequisites to the socially justified consumption of 'good' food. The humble tomato, basil and bread can be turned into a Neapolitan Pizza that wows in every bite..."

A highlight from the review of Pratishtha Monga, the winner of Food and Film's Review Writing Competition.
